Palace: GIs all look alike

'As if they never leave,' says Ermita, 'they come and go'

By Michael Lim-Ulat

AMERICAN TROOPS COME AND GO IN THIS COUNTRY. The soldiers all look alike so it's as if they never leave.

It was with such levity that Malabon's disoriented allegations that visiting forces from the United States appeared to have become a permanent feature in the landscape of Zamboanga

City and other crisis-torn parts of Mindanao.

"They are replaced every now and then. They leave, contrary to the citizens' impression that they have not left," said Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita.

Ermita did not dispute the prolonged US military presence in Mindanao, but disputed statements made by Edgar Arango, a political science professor at Western Mindanao State University, that the country had surrendered its sovereignty.

Ermita said this was just the "sign of our genius."

Recent press reports said that local officials in Mindanao have complained about the continued stay of the US soldiers after six years and that the US forces have been putting up structures that appear to be permanent.

"Our national sovereignty and territorial integrity are intact," said the re-

Chaviz NSA posting 'better than Gov Palin's'

WHAT'S WRONG WITH APPROVING an ally?

Malacanan's pondering throws its support behind newly appointed Deputy National Security Adviser (NSA) Luis "Chavit" Stigoran.

Executive Secretary Eduardo Ermita said President Macapagal-Arroyo had tapped Stigoran for the post because of his long experience as governor of Ilocos Sur spanning almost three decades. (For ex-President Estrada's reaction, turn to page A13.)

He even compared Stigoran to Sarah Palin, the governor of Alaska who was chosen as the vice presidential running mate of Republican presidential candidate John McCain in the United States.

"Imagine, a 44-year-old lady who is governor of Alaska for only two years and yet was thrust into the national scene as a vice presidential candidate?" he said.

"He is an ally, what's wrong with that? An important ally for that matter," said Ermita, commenting on allegations that the Stigoran appointment was political payback for his having set into motion the events that led to the ouster of his former buddy President Joseph Estrada, in 2001.

Stigoran's daunting report about Estrada's mounting hundreds of millions of pesos in illegal gambling led to the general's impeachment trial that led to Estrada's ouster in 2001 and the ascension to the presidency of then Vice President Macapagal-Arroyo.

"The President alone knows the criterion in which she appoints people. She thinks these people can perform in those jobs where they are appointed to," Ermita said.

15,000 toast world's longest beer bar

By Beverly T. Meibrid

IN SHAGRON THERE IS NO BEER.

That's why last Friday, more than 15,000 people flocked to San Miguel Avenue in Mandaluyong City to celebrate the country's famous brew with the annual Oktoberfest and as the world's longest beer bar.

Accompanied with a long line of steel drums, the parade began at San Miguel Avenue, from the intersection of Lungsod to Julia Vargas Avenue, was transformed into a 160.5-meter-long beer bar complete with live musical stages.

This beer bar has topped the Guinness record for the longest bar (220 meters) held by Taiwan.

First mission accomplished, food and beverage conglomerate San Miguel Corp. (SMC) commenced the celebration. Draft beer started to flow—no full mug before October—on a kick-off of the privileged version of the German festival. While the original Oktoberfest beer last usually lasts 16 days, SMC has remained a 120-day Oktoberfest.

After the kickoff on Friday, Oktoberfest will be held in different venues in Metro Manila, Cebu and

Accidental lawyer finds her true path

But the bar exam trial to publication for this bar exam trial during the first 24 hours in December (the first one starts today). We are covering the article with the 2008 bar exam in mind and in memory of the lawyer who exactly found the road has taken. Atty. del Castillo died on June 23.)

IN THE PHILIPPINES, WHEN YOU SAY you're a lawyer, people react in different ways. You sometimes get respect or children, sometimes a lot of attention. There are of course those who react with suspicion, or even hate. Remember that most popular of all Shakespearean quotations? "The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers."

What's all this about being a lawyer anyway? Is it your entrance into a world of men bound by rules, codes, laws and manners? In real life, lawgiving means making into a vast network that includes business, entertainment, technology, environment and practically everything else. A lawyer must become that proverbial jack-of-all-trades. Except

Mind Museum: Every exhibit visual, auditory, touchy-feely

By T. Burgos

IT'S SHAPED LIKE A FERRIS WHEEL and big enough to hold the earth, the universe, four kinds of environment and a T-100.

A modern science museum, which provides visitors a multidimensional experience, will be built at a cost of P5 billion in a sprawling park at Fort Bonifacio, Taguig City.

The Mind Museum, expected to open by 2015, was conceived by the Bonifacio Area Foundation Inc. (BAFI), whose board of trustees includes Josefine Campos Jr., Fernando Zobel de Ayala and Jaime L. Ayala.

A team of experts in different fields, like national artist Ben "BenCab" Cabrera and other Filipino artists, is collaborating to conceptualize and

Brits, Aussies warned on travel to Mindanao

AFTER AUSTRALIA, ITS BRETHREN here to issue its citizens against traveling to Mindanao because of the clashes between government and Moro Islamic Liberation Front forces.

The United Kingdom Foreign Commonwealth Office, on its website, said, "We advise against all travel to mainland Mindanao and the Sulu archipelago because of ongoing terrorist and insurgent activities."

Earlier, Australia advised its citizens against travel to Mindanao due to the "very high chance of terrorist attack." (Jeffrey D. Mahana)

Singkaban Festival: Window to Bulacan's rich past and abundant future

Take it from a Bulakeño to add color and glaze to an otherwise rustic word Singkaban which refers to a famous bamboo arc decoration usually put up during town fiestas, and transform it to a symbol of greater significance.

Today Singkaban stands for: "Living as Bulacaneng Bulacan."

Bulacan recalls the best, the unique, and all that is excellent in Bulacan through a week-long series of activities which include classic singing, band playing, flowered plays, street dances, art and food exhibits, parades, competition of talent and skills and unique ("Batak Bulakeño") products from all over the province. The visitor is sure to get more than just a colorful sampling of some the remarkable, better known as "Baging Bulakeño," activities and products through Singkaban.

Whether historically richly significant, or to the artistic realm, Bulacan has no reason to be proud of because the province is teeming with remarkable luminaries, heroes, artists, craftsmen, musicians, singers, performers, educators and outstanding icons, past and present.

For this year, the highlights of the celebration will be a showcase of the longest (that is, the submission of a 25-day program by the province for its bid to the Gaisan and think of the wide under-the-sky of emerging from Bulacan to popular interest, not to its distinctive sweet sandy products and lip-smacking delicacies like the Panditas. The 200 seven-day Panditas which is 2 inches in diameter and weighs more than 3,500 kilos is equivalent to 45,000 pieces of the regular sized Panditas! The tradition spot is but part of Gov. Japzon Mendoza's aggressive efforts to promote a variety of "Batak Bulakeño" products (which is that day are over 5,000) in the global marketplace.

While the Singkaban Fiesta depicts the flourishing cultural and historical heritage of Bulacan under the very capable leadership of its Governor Japzon Mendoza, "Singkaban is but a statement of our serious advocacy towards self-reliance, and an empowered citizen amid a thriving business environment but with the distinct Bulakeño touch after all, there is so much more to Bulacan than the word 'Batak' can give. "This year's theme puts to the test our very own 'Baging Bulakeño'." "Gagay, Heay or Talya, Talya or Gagay Bulakeño?" because I believe that our very best asset — our very own natural resources and products or industry — is our very people. In harnessing the talents, the potential to be something to each, especially the youth is what I have been doing since I assumed leadership."

"Bulacan is rising. Gov. Mendoza is a mover. He, hands-on, very focused public servant that has given new meaning to the word 'service' and 'commitment' through numerous programs on health, entrepreneurship, environment and other humanitarian projects which sought to uplift and improve the lives of the Bulakeños. The practical and sincere implementation of the 'Gagay or Heay' program makes him, today, the only public servant personally involved in the day-to-day concerns of his constituents down to the household level."

"I am sure the need to help build a strong community And how else can that be achieved if I rely on mere reports? I need to know what they think, need, or feel on a daily basis. Building one's self-esteem is the foundation to your commitment if they see you practice what you preach. Despite willingly follow rules, administrative orders from the government because they understand and know that the purpose is for their greater good — not for self-interest. I believe that is how I see this able to give the trust and cooperation of my constituents because they know that their role, no matter how small, contributes to the success of those programs which has benefited Bulacan. The people and province because more social, stronger more progressive despite our challenges of underdevelopment."

Gov. Mendoza, whose advocacy is anchored on character building, strongly expresses our values to be instilled among the children, the youth and the adults alike, endowment love of God, love of family, concern for others, honesty, loyalty, discipline, creativity and innovation, responsibility, compassion, hard work, dependability, which are basically the traits that characterize "Baging Bulakeño."

Singkaban Fiesta depicts the flourishing cultural and historical heritage of Bulacan under the very capable leadership of its Governor Japzon Mendoza, "Singkaban is but a statement of our serious advocacy towards self-reliance, and an empowered citizen amid a thriving business environment but with the distinct Bulakeño touch."

Baging Bulakeño. The ripple is truly very encouraging. It is more than just our responsibility to change a delicate subject. Besides, I am always challenged by the word impossible. All things are possible, with dedication, hard work, honesty, and integrity, a Bulakeño is always possible even in the worst of scenarios. Bulacan has proven it to be so, that's why beyond the festive mood, we are celebrating having overcome various areas of crisis after crisis by drawing from God's provision, our very own strength — our people, rising high as Baging Bulakeño! That's why the theme for this year sounds almost everything that is essentially Bulakeño..."

There such as an Singkaban and experience an unforgettable, fiesta-inspired event history — at only Bulacan can offer.

With so much hope and expectation, we Singkaban, because the best is yet to come!

Bulacan is Singkaban!

Choice of Imelda as DepEd honoree slammed

By Jerry S. Espinosa

THE CHOICE OF HONORARY DEPUTY Imelda Marcos as "queen of honor" at a youth leadership conference in Marikina City has stirred a kerfuffle among education officials, as well as critics of the late president's family.

The controversial wife of the late dictator Ferdinand Marcos will be honored for her "contributions to Philippine education and social work" at the DepEd annual National Leadership Training for Student Government Officers in Teachers Camp.

of the DepEd Center for Students and Government Officers, at CUEA.

At the same event, the department will formally designate 10-12-year-old actor James Miley as its "youth spokesperson."

Teacher and student groups, some DepEd executives, as well as top officials of the National Commission on Culture and the Arts (NCCA) expressed "stark opposition" to the CUEA choice of role model.

"It's really disgusting," said Antonio Tiano, head of the 12,000-strong Alliance of Government Teachers.

"Our schools should be teaching the youth that Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos led the most brutal and corrupt dictatorship this country has ever seen. We're outraged that DepEd will provide for such such a waste. We won't just let this pass," Tiano said.

Education Undersecretary Vilma Labrador, NCCA chair, and NCCA executive director Cecilia Villanueva-Morales called the decision to honor Marcos "very insensitive to the needs of the victims of martial law, including a number of public school teachers."

Both Labrador and Villanueva consider themselves "victims of the Marcos dictatorship."

The NCCA chair, who will represent Education Secretary Armin A. Llapasna at the conference's opening session, said the "choice to honor Marcos would be sending the wrong message."

Labrador said she was "not consulted" by NCCA executive director Jose Pineda about this issue.

Decision not cleared

For his part, Llapasna said the decision to invite the former first lady was not cleared with him.

"I haven't seen the program," Llapasna told the Inquirer.

Asked to comment, Pineda said "Ms.

Marcos is known for her contribution to the nation."

Pineda said "it was a suggestion by some people to invite her. They told me she was invited mostly by the University of the Philippines College of Education Administration."

When Ochoyano, president of the national league of Philippine Students, called the DepEd decision "distasteful and so insult to the nation," she was welcomed by the Marcos supporters.

Edwin Rivera, head of the National Union of Students of the Philippines, said "with such a decision, the DepEd has apparently become opinionated and insensitive to our history."

"On the choice of 'youth spokesperson,' it was said before 'but even a product of the Philippine educational system.'"

Joseph Martin Pineda, deputy secretary general of the College Educators Guild of the Philippines, said "What we need are state in quality education, not public opinion."

"Why has DepEd chosen a foreigner who barely speaks Filipino to be its spokesperson? On the other hand, he's a good choice if they want to highlight how deeply embedded the cultural imperialism is in our educational system," Pineda said.

Atienza: Harper not off hook in tree-cutting

By TJ Sison

ENVIRONMENT SECRETARY LORENZA ATIENZA yesterday pushed back Manila Mayor Ermita's criticism of the government's decision to allow the demolition of the historic administration of his father, saying the ecological crisis in Manila is not a new one.

"How can he blame anyone when the case is still being investigated by the proper department, while as the DENR [Department of Environment and Natural Resources] is already on its way to enforce the law?" Atienza said in a telephone interview.

Atienza, Llapasna's political foe in Manila, said the mayor's press conference would not influence the outcome of the DENR investigation into the cutting of 20 trees at Plaza Roma, including old trees and mangrove trees.

"The president's historic opinion does not change the course of our investigation, and the case, if warranted, would be judged with the given facts that are in place to handle environmental laws," Atienza said.

Also, citing the city government's investigation, he said there was no evidence in its report that Atienza's father, Mayor "Bibi" Harper had ordered the clearance work beyond the limits set in a DENR permit for the tree-cutting.

Endangered species

The city government, however, said the contractor, Remberto Sandoval of Green Philippines Nursery Plants, would be charged with violation of Presidential Decree 953, which protects a person who kills, damages or injures a tree.

The DENR has given Harper seven days to explain the tree-cutting and threatened to file charges against him under the principle of command responsibility. Harper could face a two-year jail term or a fine of P1,000 or both under Section 2 of PD-953.

Harper, according to DENR, was given a permit to cut 27 trees but ended up cutting 28. The DENR has issued Harper a notice of violation of four of 30 rules in the permit, including failure to coordinate with housing officials.

The trees and mangrove trees, endangered species, should have been tagged to keep them alive and maintained elsewhere, the DENR said.

Harper has denied having orders to cut the trees.

'Law applies to all'

"This case rightfully belongs in the green court and should be prosecuted by the green (environment) laws," Harper is a government official," Atienza said.

He added: "The law should apply to all, not just the rich and powerful in Manila. As they say, 'Everyone is equal.'"

Meanwhile, Jose Papa, president of Bagong Kalikasan, criticized Atienza for his little standard on environmental protection.

While he has questioned the cutting of trees at the Manila plaza, Atienza has not stopped anyone to cut trees along MacArthur Highway in Bulacan and at Mt. Arayat National Park in Negros Occidental, Papa said.

Atienza once failed to stop the Quezon City government from demolishing the trees in front of the DENR building to give way to a bank overpass, he said.

"Stop cutting all remaining trees. The forest area is down to 11 percent and global warming is accelerating," Papa said. With a report by Rhea C. Santos.

Lawyer learns lessons from US, comes home

By Benjamin Jung

HAPPINESS IS NOT at all found in the life of a lawyer in the American Dream. Take it from lawyer Global Pinoy Benito.

In Manila, he had everything planned after earning his master's law degree from the prestigious Tulane University, one of the law schools in mainstream law in New Orleans, LA, 2001.

While his wife was long employed as a nurse in a US hospital, he was doing private practice in Pasadena serving Filipinos in their immigration and real property cases.

They lived a life that he has greatly enjoyed and a small family of three.

But in 2006, he packed his belongings back to the Philippines and moved his family to Quezon City. They now live in Quezon City.

When so many are chasing after the American dream, this Filipino leaves the US, saying he can see things clearly now

He found it in environmental law practice in the Philippines, he said.

See growing with others
Add to this peaceful work when needed presented him.

Benito, then 35-year-old, peacefully grew up in his new environment. He was a good student for the couple but occupied with their respective careers.

"It was a depressing sight seeing your child grow up without you," he said. "So we weighed every option at hand and decided to head home together."

Leaving the child in the care of his grandparents in the Philippines, he said, he and his wife decided to head home together.

Benito recalled how he was adopted by the American environment and learned how to be on his own, unlike when he and his family were in Manila where they were constantly helped along.

"I had to drive a single truck to move my small to a new house. I couldn't imagine doing it myself," he said.

Like RP
Living in New Orleans, a third world state, he said, was very much like living in the Philippines.

"There was corruption left and right, and the weather was very much like ours."

During a late home and doing the plumbing work also doing other jobs, he said, he found himself actually doing it.

"It was not practical to have children in this third world state, he had to be helped and helped," he said.

Once upon a time top CEO could only afford 'espasol' for lunch

"THE FUTURE of pharmaceuticals is in biotech, not chemicals," says the British CEO.

By Stephanie Dyche
Contributor

THE PHILIPPINES SCORED zero on the aerial tally in Beijing, but there is one Olympic star it can claim for itself—grandson of the bellies of the world's poorest children.

It is an irony that with the first medal of a sportsman's dream of victory at the 2008 Olympics, it was thanks to an oral vaccine for cholera made by a Filipino pharmacist, Carlos "Doy" Espasol, president and CEO of United Laboratories (UL), given the inside scoop. "In the last Olympics, this was had a momentous moment where they thought would win the gold medal, but he got diarrhea. Thanks to this time, all of China's athletes took this vaccine so they don't get diarrhea or cholera. And because you cannot have a cholera epidemic during the Olympics, all the food handlers in all the restaurants of Beijing had to take the vaccine. He received it."

The Olympic medal is for the latest in the success story of United, a company that has been around for so long and has grown so large, most people forget it is a homegrown business that began as a small drugstore in Manila just after Pao M. Pao II.

From Divorced to Beijing

The late founder, Jose C. Espasol, first introduced his own products in the 1950s with the release of TBA-TBA. It was called "United American TBA-TBA" to ride on people's positive reaction for all things American, but even without the "United American" tag, TBA-TBA remains one of the strongest brands in the Philippines.

If Espasol was the driver of the family business, it was his son, Carlos, who took over the reins. He is the face behind United's expansion in overseas pharmaceuticals and consumer products—a move that propelled the company's business in the last two years. Espasol is one of the 50 Filipino CEOs named in the book "Transcendence: Stories for Inspiring Leaders" published by the Management Association of the Philippines.

He recounts the circumstances that led him to change the path United was on. "This is what you want to do. If you look at the product portfolio of United, we were very strong in over-the-counter drugs, but we were not very strong in general health care."

CHIEF OF Espasol

Using chicken feathers to build homes

By Kenneth M. del Rosario

MINORINO SCIA, A TEACHER at wood science and wood products at the UP Los Baños College of Forestry and Natural Resources, has been working on his project, "Recovering Chicken Feathers for Low Cost Building Material," for more than nine months now.

The project aims to utilize waste of chicken feathers to develop, formulate, lightweight, and durable building materials used in building material for houses and contractors.

Scia's project is a two-time winner in the single year old field

Conservation and Environmental Science Program (Bird Engage) which supports innovative sustainability solutions that have not received awards. Scia has provided over P1.5 million in funding assistance for projects.

Scia, Master Philippines post, Bird Master Scia, recently earned Scia's operations as a way of getting to know the project being supported by the program.

According to Scia, the majority of chicken feathers are used as a waste for the poultry industry. These feathers are not used in the poultry industry as they are considered to be a big source of waste.

"Chicken feathers are the waste products of the poultry industry," said Scia. "The millions of kilos of waste feathers generated by commercial poultry processing plants pose a serious environmental problem."

He said there have been several attempts to solve the waste problem of chicken feathers, especially particularly commercial applications which involve them in producing and making films, fibers and materials.

However, they require only a few resources, fairly reducing the amount of waste chicken feathers generated.

Scia demonstrated to Scia how the chicken feathers are used and how to produce a material that is suitable for construction materials such as insulation or roofing.

Though he and his team still mostly use 6 to 12 months before they demonstrate the final formulation of feathers and cement, Scia said that he has 80 percent cement and 20 percent feather in his final product.

"We'll never know the poultry have been mixed with feathers," said Scia. "It's already too small and that from here to be an important step towards the use of chicken feathers."

The professor said he needs more time to make commercially viable but cost-effective materials made from recycled chicken feathers.

"We're proud to be involved in such a exciting and meaningful project. Our support for this endeavor underlines our commitment to finding sustainable solutions to environmental and maintaining the environment," Scia said.

This environmental project has been recognized by Scia, who was a recipient for his project, "Feather Reuse for Farm Construction," in which he built a house right before his office that is on a 100-year old lot.

He said the house, which came from the 1950s, is made of a natural material that is made from chicken feathers. He has to be involved in the project to prove to a skeptic that there is no right or wrong answer to the house for the next two years.

Scia is, however, Scia's long-term plan to partner with various groups and organizations with different vision such as the Bataan-Bataan.

Together, they had established a scientific garden in the La Mesa University and a small park in 2007. He had also planted 100 plants in the La Mesa University in 2007, and had built the first laboratory of Philippine Endemic and Unique Tree Species at the La Mesa University in 2007.

Scia has also supported the Center for Environmental Assessment and Education for his Project Learning Tree from 2001 to 2002, and the Philippine Film Festival from 2001 to 2002.

In 2007, Scia said that they will continue to maintain the use of recycled materials in their future projects, adding that 80 percent of materials used in their work is recycled. Scia said that the company would double the production of their feather cement.

FEATURES IN BRIEF

Demo farm trains coffee farmers

AN MAKERS OF THE COFFEE BRAND MISTLE, MISTLE MAKES SURE THAT LOCAL COFFEE farmers are armed with the best knowledge available to them to grow coffee.

Quality products, after all, can only be as good as the raw materials they are made of. The New England and Demographic Farm (NEED) in Tuguegarao, Cebu, has provided knowledge and training to coffee farmers to ensure that only the high quality coffee beans go into their cups of coffee.

The NEED operates based on three objectives: increase farmers to the best coffee farming technology from Mistle, provide a venue for the training of these farmers on the proper techniques of coffee production, propagate good coffee planting materials for their coffee to farmers, and share viable farming techniques to increase productivity while lowering production cost.

After more than 10 years conducted by the company's P&S Center in Tuguegarao, Cebu, the company has been able to train more than 100 farmers for experimentation for local production and production work.

The NEED also develops appropriate coffee farming technology which can be disseminated to coffee farmers, manage coffee plantations and assist farmers through various community support training programs.

Knowing that education is a powerful tool in technology transfer, Mistle has done up their regular training programs designed for specific purposes and three levels of training:

1. Farmers coffee production technology training
2. Coffee specialist training program
3. On-the-job training that focuses on the complete technology of coffee growing, from the origin of coffee, its history, adaptability, selection, soil and climate requirements, various harvesting up-to post-harvest techniques and finally the production of the green coffee bean.

Scia's research, "I remember it as research in the 1990s years ago when we found out that all of the local products are imported. When I came to the Philippines, I found that the people here did not employ proper methods to do it. This, she says, indicates the need for a more 'active' or 'creative' rather than 'passive' approach to the problem. "I am happy to see that this is slowly changing. I am happy to see that this is slowly changing. I am happy to see that this is slowly changing."

Vicki-Hayden romance going pffft?

Entertainment

Nothing but odors, and quite. They are one of the high profile couples around.

It is said Vicki is hoping to get some breathing space in Paris, and "to take it one day at a time."

Eventually, just last month, the couple became about their relationship.

"The truth is the same as in any boyfriend-girlfriend relationship: love, passion, honesty, openness and respect, etc. After all, this is the people around us who are always on our case. I believe that younger ones, later on, will be Vicki's successors that I am not as immature and inexperienced as they'd be."

It is said that the couple has been together for a long time, and that they are still in love.

"I personally believe it's harder for them because, aside from what I mentioned, the other two is very hard to do. The single, most mature women, as they battle the mid-life crisis, especially of women. And because they're alone, it's not easy for them to find a partner."

But, to be fair, it's not easy for them to find a partner. It's not easy for them to find a partner. It's not easy for them to find a partner.

Had to agree with that. But, girls, ladies, women, for married with the burden of youth, the road down is a little harder (see sidebar).

Feeding program

According to the Food and Nutrition Research Institute (FNRI), over 25 percent of more than 1.5 million Filipino children are underweight, and over 38 percent are malnourished.

Department of Social Welfare and Development Secretary Ligaya Aldeguer said that the five-year-old is a child in the growth and development of the child.

With over 1 million of the country's population who are children under five years old, Ligauer, through the FNRI's Feeding Program, is working to help change the numbers and the fate of children, one generation at a time.

Many of the most malnourished children in a barangay are given rice rations for food and a day for every six months.

Feeding Program Feeding Program has also been implemented in over 10 barangays in Manila, Pangasinan, Iloilo, Cebu, and Cagayan. Recently, it was implemented in the barangays in Cagayan, Pangasinan, and Iloilo.

When the program was launched in the barangays, it was a big success.

No coconut for Burlesque Queen

After her illustrious performances during the 38th anniversary of the 100th Street Group last month, Queen of Burlesque Miss Vice Anne Rose (Vice Anne) has been well at the 100th Street Group.

The reason? She was said to have been disappointed with the experience and the audience had to be a bit of a disappointment.

She says that Miss Vice Anne is a queen. Miss Vice Anne originally wanted to try something local and chose the 100th Street Group, a local group that includes local artists and performers.

Western Union now enforcing "One ID policy" across Philippine locations

Asia's leader of the Western Union Philippines is now enforcing its "One ID policy" for all financial transactions made by banks and non-bank under "One ID" supervision. The Western Union Company has expanded its list of accepted IDs to include valid student IDs for non-Philippine students starting from this new school year.

"This is indeed welcome news for both Western Union and its customers especially now that classes have started. Students with parents listed in the province can easily transact through Western Union by simply presenting their valid photo ID," said Western Union's marketing director, Philippines, The Western Union Company.

Western Union has also lowered its domestic money transfer fees to as low as P12 on transactions. According to P20 and below. This special promotion, which was launched on May 3, 2008, is intended to encourage transactions during the weekend period.

"We've had very encouraging feedback on the Western Union domestic money transfer service because it's convenient, reliable, and fast. Residents can get the money within minutes from over 1,000 Agent locations in the Philippines. We hope the special promotion rates can also encourage more consumers in the Philippines, including those who regularly send money to their children studying in other parts of the country, to experience the service."

According to stated that new, when employment IDs issued by private companies and government offices and integrated list of the Philippines (BSP) IDs are also accepted for transactions. Following is the complete list of valid IDs:

- Passport
- Driver's license
- Professional Regulation Commission (PRC) ID
- Integrated Bar of the Philippines (IBP) ID
- National Bureau of Investigation (NBI) clearance
- Police Clearance Certificate (PCC)

A cool partnership

By John Proderick and Joel Mari Caruso

OLIVER DAD, LUIS M. Caruso, began his air-conditioning contracting business, Caruso Engineering, in 1967 after a visit with Delta Filters, where he had put up the air-conditioning division.

Like most young men, Caruso was a member of the Manila Jaycees, where in 1961 he met Henry Ip Jr.—who was also starting out his business—and the friendship developed.

All the time Caruso had in mind to start his own business, he was also in the company of Ip. It was about to open his Dreamland store in Makati, he found the area, and he went to Ip to find a place. They had a discussion in which it was decided that Caruso would be the one to condition the store, and Ip would be the one to build the store. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman.

Without hesitation, Caruso took it for granted, a fully air-conditioned store was a revolutionary idea at the time. But it wasn't. It was a business. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman.

which Caruso is today. Caruso is working with Ip. It was very simple. He would have many things every day. During the time that he was still active, he would walk all through the construction site, and when he would see something that was not quite right, he would immediately call the division of the contractor involved. Sometimes there would be some topics in air-conditioning, and he would advise and tell the contractor. I considered this very constructive advice.

As an owner growing up, Caruso would have with him some of the things he learned working with Ip. One was to "prepare and build what the economy is doing, and when it goes up, because it eventually will go up, you open the door."

Mr. Ip also taught him "there is no substitute for hard work." Caruso has been working about 15-17 hours a day, selling a good number of his employees and business partners.

After his helping in the company, Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman.

There are many, which we hope to impart to our sons, Luis II and Manuel, who at the time were interested in the family business.

When we look back, if there was an amazing thing for Caruso and Mr. Ip, it was the partnership that was formed. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman. Caruso was a contractor, and Ip was a businessman.

Surfing dudes lead beach cleanup

Green Zinc team to clean up beaches.

By Anna B. Jaramba

IT'S TIME: SAN JUAN, LA UNION: One of them. When a beach of surf aficionados decided to help clean up their playground, December last year, the entire surfing community and municipality got involved, so it spread.

Three months ago, four surfers decided to begin picking up litter from the shores of San Juan beach. They "recruited" other surfers to join to clean up the beach by selling promo tanks on their backs from a stick of gum-colored sunscreen.

When garbage was collected, they realized there were no trash bins around. When they brought it to the beach house, they learned they needed a garbage truck to collect all the rubbish.

Calling their group Green Zinc, they tied up with the La Union Hall chairman the local government to make the beach house to pick up trash on the beach.

"It's an awareness, a state of mind. We don't have ownership yet, so anyone who cleans up the beach is supporting our cause," said Chris Sullivan, Green Zinc board member.

Not that the locals were waiting. Sullivan said that as soon as the trash bins were set up the local community just naturally began making use of them. Without being asked, they joined in to help Green Zinc in their weekly beach cleanup projects.

Sullivan said the local community understands the significance of the cause, but there was no incentive fun. "Once you provide the infrastructure, people just do their share," he said.

They have 500 supporters. Green Zinc was able to bring in a garbage truck.

The garbage truck, in fact, is often driven by the teenagers who pick up the beach trash two to three times per week, Sullivan said.

Vito Orlan, another Green Zinc board member, said garbage collection from the beach is mostly brought in by volunteers who only cost San Juan some 200 pesos to run.

Trash bins have been placed along the beaches of Bataan, San Juan, and Tubbataha. A mobile team of 30-40 Green Zinc supporters, clad in Green Zinc gear, comb the beaches every Friday to collect rubbish.

"It's not always who does it first, it's always who it goes down. And we're doing this hand-in-hand with the local government," Sullivan said.

Water cleanup

Green Zinc is now embarking on a project to clean the water by installing and repairing public toilets and setting up liquid waste purification units.

The new project is set to be completed by year-end. Green Zinc partnered with Australian and United Golden Beach and California Beach school. Both schools are known to be surfers around the world, they're at so known for their commitment to the environment.

If anything, Sullivan said, the community projects have fostered community fellowship. Inspired by the organizing of support, Green Zinc plans to expand its program to Marikina and other surfing communities in the country.

Green Zinc T-shirts are available for $100 at San High Street Beach, La Union, and at the 340 Surf Shop in Katipunan Ave., QC. Twenty percent of the proceeds will go to the projects of Green Zinc.

"We are one with Green Zinc in their vision to keep San Juan and La Union clean, and help strengthen its cause among my surfing destinations in the Philippines," said Robert Bernal said from his board manager by Polaris.

Golden Beach apparel and surfboards are available at San High Street Beach, La Union, the 340 Surf Shop, Katipunan Ave., and the 340 Surf Shop, Katipunan Ave.

Surfboards and accessories are available at Beach stores in Cebu to 4, SM 8000, Cagayan-Lumbini, San High Street Beach, La Union, the 340 Surf Shop, Katipunan Ave., and the 340 Surf Shop, Katipunan Ave.

Citibank Savings depositor takes off for Mexico's Chichen Itza

TRIP JAMES AGUIRE, a 36-year-old entrepreneur from Paly City, and his wife took the Citibank Savings branch in Eniguel, Quezon City, history of this year, he never thought he'd get more than just a warm welcome at a new customer of the bank. "I was encouraged to open an account with Citibank Savings because I wanted to experience the personalized service my wife, who's a local customer, has been raving about. I never expected that I'd have something, all I was after was security for my savings," shared James, who runs a trading company importing chemical and agricultural products.

After he and his wife visited the recently completed Citibank Savings that gave him and his wife a warm welcome at Citibank Philippines, and Citibank Savings the chance to fly to visit famous tourist destinations around the world while letting their money earn the highest possible interest.

James opened a Time Deposit Plus account, the new high-yielding deposit product from Citibank and Citibank Savings. The entrepreneur was attracted by the competitive interest rates of the new product, one of the best offers, if not the highest, for the market. "I didn't want to deposit my wife's funds because I feel safer with Citibank and the Time Deposit Plus product offered interest rates within the range of what I was hoping to earn for my investments," explained James.

After he opened a Time Deposit Plus account, James received letter from the bank. While he was excited with the possibility of winning to any one of the eight destinations, James wasn't really expecting he'd win. That's why when he received the call a month and a half ago in learning that he was one of the winners of second prize, James said he was in luck. "I was very excited! My wife and I are used to travel from Citibank, but this one is definitely big!" shared James.

For his prize, James chose the Chichen Itza in Mexico, the famous Mayan pyramid located in the Yucatan Peninsula, which is over 1,500 years old. James can't wait to explore the famous Mayan ruins, which was the center of political, economic, religious and military power not only in Yucatan but also in the entire southwestern part of Mesoamerica.

"Of course this going with my wife, because if not for her encouragement to open an account with Citibank Savings, I won't be able to experience this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," said James.

Cris said domestic tourism is breaking new grounds. The signs of development are encouraging the industry. Last year's travel fair has yielded significant domestic tourism interest from the public.

"Many years ago, the Filipino traveler would only visit places where he or she has family, or known someone who can be a host or a tour guide," Cris explained. "Now, the tour packages at the travel fair have made it possible for us to go everywhere, even to places where we don't have anyone."

"All of us are members of this country," said Tourism Secretary Arroyo, who stresses his full support behind the travel fair.

"If you want an urban experience, this is part of it. If you go to Makati or SM Mall of Asia area, if you want nature-based activities like Cebu and Davao. If you want tradition and culture, every region and province has something to contribute. From a marketer's point of view, we can never run out of products. It's a matter of view's perspective and how to package it."

Judai: I just want to be a good wife and mom

By Raynor Sato Doyle

ACTRESS JUDY KIM MASTERMINDS HER first movie, one of the reasons she's holding off her alter ego with Ryan Reynolds.

She told Entertainment Weekly on the set of her latest film, Gray's Anatomy, that she's playing her first wife will have been married by the time she dies the last with Ryan.

"We started a couple years when she was in her first film, Crash," she explained. "Working marriage is Ryan. I don't want Ryan to get dragged into that. And I'll never see him as a family with this problem because we're not."

On her own

She insisted that she travels to where she films on her own.

"I make my own decisions," she said. "I don't want to see my name. I don't have any, really, because I'm not making."

"She made it quite clear," he said. "I'm not a part of anything. She's making it her own decision, I will accept."

Last week, the Supreme Court rejected her appeal, but she's not sure if she's

"I was down, but only days later we learned that 'Gray's' was being picked up by Warner Bros. in the District of Columbia Language Film," she added.

She said that, but her last name is always followed by good news. "The year has been like a roller coaster ride for me," she said. "I got for my first, I would have given up."

She's married since the last movie for "Thinking," but that makes no sense. "Thinking about to represent the country is an honor."

She doesn't even consider the fact that "Thinking" edged out "Gray's," picked by the District of Columbia.

Leaving ABS-CBN?

Before this year, Judai was reportedly signed to contract for three movies, ABS-CBN didn't support "Thinking" and instead paid an

It helped that the 5-man band played like a top-notch rock 'n' roll crew

By the third song, she was performing minutes when looking out her best friend: "Get it all night!"

It helped a lot that the five-man band played like a top-notch rock 'n' roll crew, providing solid backup for her songbook tunes. In "I Love You Like What I Want," the music offered solid, consistent backing with lead, three new girls.

At that point, David, who served onstage like a rock band, wearing down and being a way after getting their first two songs, suddenly jumped into the front row (a gesture that even took a full 10 seconds).

But there were behind scenes when the band itself and just going through the motions demanded by a use that required a young audience group to listen. The show's lead singer, David, was a "Rock Thing" was a struggle.

A second surprising factor about David's career was that he was a fan of the band. From the large, powerful front and back, he had hopes that served as stage backing, to the path through the and established the artist's use and baby grand, which was rolled out for her to play in the ballad, "Where You're Going."

But this was one lady who also influenced in "Complicated," "Crazy," and "What You Want," which she played live.

It was a night of singing live 12 years old in the audience could appreciate all that, but David's voice sounded differently than her old 12 years ago.
